From:	ehud barak <ehbarak1@gmail.com>
To:	Kenneth Murphy <kmurphy@law.columbia.edu>
CC:
Date:	Thu, 10/10/2013 10:24:32 AM
Subject:	Re: request for a commentary from Project Syndicate

Dear Kenneth
I'll do. What's the dead line?
Best
EB

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 9, 2013, at 12:55, "Kenneth Murphy" <kmurphy@law.columbia.edu> wrote:

Dear Mr. Barak,

You may recall that we corresponded a few weeks ago about you perhaps contributing to Project Syndicate, the global association of 527 newspapers in 154 countries with a combined circulation of 138 million. We are now in the process of putting together our annual Year in Review for 2013, and we would like to invite you to contribute an article of 1000 or so words in English on how you see security in the Middle East evolving in 2014 that we would then provide to our papers around the world for publication in the Year in Review. (Among the early confirmed contributors for the 2013 review are South Korean President Park Guen-hye, Mexico's President Peña Nieto, China's Prime Minister Li Keqiang, German Chancellor Angela Merkel, Governor of the Reserve Bank of India Raghuram Rajan (a long time PS monthly columnist,) Governor of the Bank of Japan Haruhiko Kuroda, IMF Managing Director Christine Lagarde, World Bank chief economist Kaushik Basu, George Soros, Mohamed ElBaradei, and Bill Gates. Other invitees, so far, to the Year in Review include President Dilma Rousseff of Brazil, President Abdullah Gul of Turkey, ECB President Mario Draghi, former Italian Prime Minister Mario Monti, former Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, Nobel laureate Amartya Sen, Justin Yifu Lin, Asian Development Bank Chief Economist Changyong Rhee, and Michael Sandel.

Many of the world's most important newspapers are members of PS, including Yomiuri Shimbun and Nikkei in Japan, Caijing in China, The Times of India, Kompass in Indonesia, Chosun Ilbo in South Korea, The Australian Financial Review in Australia, The Guardian in the UK, Figaro and Le Monde in France, Handelsblatt, Die Welt, and Sueddeutsche Zeitung in Germany (indeed we have a paper in every EU country), Fohla de Sao Paulo in Brazil, and countless others. Among the contributors to our Year in Review for 2012 were Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, Turkish President Abdullah Gül, Colombia's President Juan Manuel Santos, then US Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta, IMF Managing Director Christine Lagarde, Brazil's Finance Minister Guido Mantega, French Finance Minister Pierre Moscovici, Governor of the Bank of Japan Haruhiko Kuroda, Nobel laureate Joe Stiglitz, World Bank chief economist Kaushik Basu, and the philosopher Michael Sandel.

Essentially, what PS does is provide commentaries to our member papers, who then translate them and publish. (PS, however, provides Arabic, Bohasan, Chinese, Czech, French, German, Hindi, Italian, Mandarin, Portuguese, Russian, and Spanish translations.) Because we do not discriminate against newspapers in poor countries, PS has, beyond doubt, the greatest platform for disseminating ideas around the world in different languages. This is why so many important statesmen write for us regularly. If you visit our website at www.project-syndicate.org you can see the potential platform that we can provide for your ideas.

I thank you for your kindness in considering my request, and do hope that you will agree to contribute.

Yours faithfully,

Kenneth Murphy
Director, Editor in Chief